Humanities threaten to destroy the careful balance of the planet and in the process undermine its own existence. This article looks at 4 proposals from the British environmental scientist James Lovelock. Lovelock contends that humanity threatens to destroy the careful balance of the planet and in the process undermine its own existence. The article explores four proposals from a British environmental scientist, James Lovelock, that point to the ways in which human civilization may ultimately destroy itself unless drastic measures are taken. Lovelock's proposals are: 1) a new approach to global governance, 2) the creation of a global carbon tax, 3) the establishment of a global environmental court, and 4) the development of a new scientific paradigm. These proposals are discussed in detail in the article, along with their potential implications for the future of humanity.
